

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. For years I have seen the control of more and more stations by fewer and fewer people, severely limiting the variety of viewpoints that makes this country so great. Actions like these by Sinclair only serve to show how obviously wrong it was to ever think of altering the FCC regulations that for so many years worked wonderfully. These actions also prove that regardless of the rhetoric being thrown about, big corporations have only one thing in mind: their own interests. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
